In December, trade ambassadors from countries around the world came together in MS with the responsibility of importing and exporting goods and services for their countries.

While negotiating with ambassadors from other countries, they were also investing in long term development projects, giving and receiving foreign aid, and paying tariffs on goods and services bought from countries outside of their trade alliance.

What will surprise you is that these trade ambassadors were actually middle and high school students participating in the International Economic Summit.

The program is in depth, engaging, hands-on, real world and challenging. It engages students with their left and right brains via research, debate, creativity and critical thinking. Currency conversion is necessary as high income countries use “Welcos”, middle income countries use “Devcos” and low income countries use “Lescos.” The Summit teaches students to “do what economists do.” Businesses wishing to volunteer or sponsor teams for the 2015 Summit can do so for $100/team. For more information you can contact MCEE at 601-974-1325 or mscee@millsaps.edu.
